Join Professor Berry and students from her “Nineteenth Century Women Healers” class in a discussion of their joint research project on Dr. Sarah Loguen Fraser (1850-1933), one of the first African American women to earn a medical degree, and the first woman doctor in the Dominican Republic. As part of the Colleges’ commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Harriet Tubman’s death, Berry and her students will establish connections between Tubman and the work that African American women such as Loguen were able to accomplish.
