			This seminar explores how ordinary workers have mobilized to change American society during the formative years of capitalist development. Through a study of social movement history & primary source documents, we examine the politics of revolutionary farmers & artisans at the turn of the 19th century, pivotal conflicts over slavery & industrialization, & the consolidation of a national industrial labor movement during the 1930's-40's. We pay particular attention to how social movements develop theories of democratic power & social change, & how the distinctive American traditions of abolitionism, socialism, & nationalist protectionism that they developed still resonate today.
